GOOD-BYE GOLDEN JET

By Scott Taylor, Photos courtesy Winnipeg Jets: A Celebration of Professional Hockey in Winnipeg and Hockey Hall of Fame Images

He was big, strong, muscular, boyish and accessible. He was a superstar in every sense of the word. And when he signed that contract with Ben Hatskin and the Winnipeg Jets on June 27, 1972, Robert Marvin Hull changed hockey forever.

On Monday, Jan. 30, 2022, the legendary Hall of Famer Bobby Hull, one of the two men who brought big league professional hockey to Winnipeg, passed away at the age of 84.

Hull was charismatic, idiosyncratic, outgoing, popular, oft-criticized and by some, fiercely disliked, but during his time there was no one, not one person in our province, more important to the development of the professional game both on and off the ice.

In 1961, Hull helped lead the Chicago Blackhawks to their first Stanley Cup in 23 years; he was the second player (after Rocket Richard) to score more than 50 goals in a single NHL season; he set the record of 54 in 1966 and broke it by four goals a couple of seasons later and along with Chicago teammate Stan Mikita he helped popularize the curved hockey stick blade in the NHL.

But it's what he did in 1972 that changed the face of professional hockey at every level and brought Hatskin's hockey dream to life.

Nicknamed the Golden Jet by a Chicago sportswriter because of his long strides, blazing speed and flowing blonde hair, Hull was a magnificent leftwinger who professed to be a farmer at heart. He had been the greatest player in the history of the Blackhawks for the past 15 years when Hatskin decided that he was the one man who could give the Jets and the new, outlaw World Hockey Association, the credibility it needed.

called an accountant named Harvey Weinberg. He was Hull's business manager/agent. At the time, Hull was in the early June, Hatskin returned to process of negotiating a new contract with the Hawks because he had no other choice. Due to the NHL's Draconian reserve clause, the Hawks owned Hull's rights until the day they wanted to forfeit them. It was a form a slavery on the rich and talented. Hatskin believed that if he offered the right amount of money, the 32-year-old Hull might consider leaving the NHL.

"I felt, overall, we'd get a good percentage of NHL players," Hatskin told the Winnipeg Tribune back in 1973. "But getting a superstar like Hull would mean instant-league in the minds of the public and the news media. Also it would cause other players to take the WHA seriously. There were only three or four superstars in hockey. All but Hull were tied up. He was our trump card. We went after him and we got him."

Hatskin went after him by telling Weinberg, "We'll pay him a million bucks." At first Hull and his agent thought it was nothing but talk, but as Hull became more frustrated with the Blackhawks, the offer started to have some serious merit.

In the meantime, no one in the Blackhawks organization believed for a minute that the Golden Jet would leave the NHL. For somewhere in the neighborhood of $250,000, paid over three seasons, Hull would sign with the Hawks. "Winnipeg didn't have a million bucks and the rest of the league wasn't really going to put up the money to give one team a superstar," so why worry. The Hawks believed all So, in December of 1971, Hatskin the talk was nothing more than a publicity gimmick.

make the WHA a legitimate big-time hockey league and would give Winnipeg the brightest star in its sporting history. After the meeting, Hull told the Chicago

Tribune, "If Winnipeg pays, I'm gone."

Back in Winnipeg, Hatskin called a news conference and with a battery of microphones under his nose, he told the world: "I'm 99.99 per cent sure that he'll sign. It looks good."

A few days later, Weinberg called Hatskin and hockey changed forever. Hull said Winnipeg accorded him the best of two worlds after he signed contracts worth $2.75 million that would cover the next 10 years of his life. Late that afternoon at Portage and Main, Hull signed a very public contract with the Jets. The size of the turn-out surprised Hull as traffic backed up for blocks on three sides of one of Canada's busiest intersections—Portage and Main—at the peak of the 5 o'clock rush hour. People stood on their parked cars to catch a glimpse of the Golden Jet.

"I was a little pessimistic how people would react toward me," Hull told the Free Press. "People getting a lot of money sometime bring out the envy in others, but these people were great. The thrill is certainly one of my two greatest. It was a lot like scoring the 51st goal."

No. 51 in the 1965-66 season snapped Rocket Richard's 21-year-old record of 50 goals. Hull, ultimately, scored 54 goals that season, then scored 58 goals in 1968-69.

The terms of what was considered to be the largest contract ever given to a North American professional athlete (at the time), were as follows:

"A Manitoba Moment"

A Conversation with a Canadian Icon – Ed Schreyer-Part 1 of 2 By Bud Ulrich

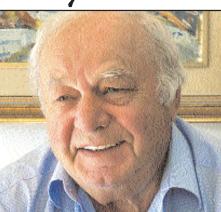

Bud Ulrich

On a sunny winter day, I had the pleasure to visit Ed Schreyer at his quaint home just outside the perimeter of Winnipeg where he has resided for over 50 years with his wife Lily and home to their four children. Indeed, it was an honour to chat with the former Governor General of Canada (1979-1984) and Premier of Manitoba (1969-1977).

Immediately after serving as Governor General of Canada, almost anything that Ed would do, in some ways, would be a bit of a let-down, but in his case, he was appointed as the Canadian High Commissioner to Australia up until 1988 when he returned to Winnipeg.

Ed grew up on a farm six miles north of Beausejour, Manitoba during the mid to late 1930s, just climbing out of the depression. His family was probably amongst the most well-off, but that was relative. All families were living on the edge of poverty. He was the youngest of five boys and one sister living on the family farm. It was a three-generation home, and he was under the instruction from his parents to keep his grandparents company, and if they wanted to talk, reminisce, or whatever, he had better listen or they would find something "else" for him to do. However, they never told him what the "else" would be. Ed felt it would be herding cows, which he hated. His grandpa spoke English quite a bit, but it wasn't his preferred language and his grandma never spoke a word of English. The conversation was in German and occasionally Ed would have to be not the translator, but a "relayor" as his grandma had a larynx issue and she could only whisper, although she could whisper loudly enough so everyone could make out what she was saying. Ironically, Ed's grandpa was hard of hearing. If Ed wasn't around, his grandpa pretended not to understand what grandma was saying. He believes it might have been "selective" hearing.

Through Ed's grandpa, Ed learned the "Cryillic" alphabet (used by many Slavic peoples; Ukrainian, Russian, Bulgarian, Serbian, and some other Slavic languages). He doesn't recall how he learned it, but he did. He doesn't speak it fluently, but can read and write Ukrainian to this day.

While it was common for youngsters on farms to drop out of school at the end of grade 8, Ed was determined to gain further education and asked his dad if he could attend high school in the town of Beauseiour. His dad had a rental home in town, and as the tenants had moved out, it was available to Ed. At the tender age of 13, Ed was living on his own and attending the local high school. He claims people would gasp at this arrangement today. Obviously, times have changed and it's not that his parents were carefree and without solicitude for Ed, they were strict and, in those days, when you were 13 or 14 not only were you expected to work, but you were put to work. His dad didn't believe in "pocket money", but Ed could purchase groceries from one of the general stores and his dad would take care of the cost. He purchased several bottles of soft drinks along with groceries and invited school friends to come over to his home with instructions that they could drink as many bottles of pop they wanted, provided they left him the bottles. He then cashed the empty bottles in for his spending money. Ed claims his dad should have known better.

Attending high school had presented several challenges for Ed. He was doing very well for the first few months. He had a French teacher who was "very French" and a very good teacher. Ed was good at language, but then realized one day, and although this may be considered in a negative way, he was getting a reputation of being a bit of a teacher's pet. Ed couldn't have that, so he did what was necessary and didn't volunteer any more answers. It didn't please his teachers, but he was accepted and became more popular amongst his peers. He wanted to be part of the teen culture. Ed was living the charmed life, not spoiled though.

Ed graduated from high school at the age of sixteen as he started school a year younger. He was amongst only 8 or 9 students in grade 12. The attrition rate was high which seemed to be the pattern back then. He already had a job with the local mortician driving a hearse. He received $20 for each funeral which took approximately 2 hours. This salary worked out to be $10 per hour, which is far beyond minimum wage of $2.50 or $3.00 per hour. As Ed states, "I was in seventh heaven." He had serious thoughts about studying mortuary science and made a trip to Minneapolis to consider that possibility. He and his dad made the trip, and he "cased" out the University of Minnesota and concluded it wasn't practical. In retrospect, Ed bemoans such a big event in his life and yet it was taken so casually.

February, 2023 - Message from Minister Scott Johnston - Seniors and Long-Term Care

Developing a Seniors Strategy-ageism and ableism exist and should be reduced

Hon. Scott Johnston

Dear friends,

For several months the Manitoba government has been connecting with 10,000 seniors, family members, and people who work with seniors to gain their perspectives towards the development of a seniors strategy that we will deliver to Manitobans this winter.

There are 229,050 Manitobans aged 65 or older living in the province, representing 17.1 per cent of the total population. Of that group, 29,255 are aged 85 or older. The proportion of women outnumbers the population as age increases.

Manitoba has a rapidly aging population and in the coming years, there will be a much greater need and demand for specialized services and supports for older Manitobans, in the community, within healthcare facilities, and in long-term care.

Sadly, research tells us that approximately one quarter (24.4 per cent) of Manitobans over 65 often feel isolated from others. Indigenous seniors are considered at high risk of experiencing social isolation due to factors such as racism, marginalized language, culture, poverty and historic negative experiences.

Our government is looking to create a seniors strategy where older Manitobans are valued and empowered to live healthy and productive lives in their homes and communities as long as it is safely possible.

As the *Minister of Seniors and Long-*Term Care I have engaged in extensive dialogue with Manitobans to inform the development of the Seniors Strategy. The following is some of the input we have heard from Manitobans through the consultation process:

- As Manitobans age, we may experience increasingly complex care and support needs related to dementia, mental health and other chronic conditions.
- Manitobans want to live independent, vibrant, and fulfilling lives in their own homes and communities, for as long as possible. Each individual and family's needs are specific; some want to stay in their home, others with family, and for some it's about staying connected to a larger community.
- Life is getting more expensive for seniors who are dealing with issues of inflation, fixed incomes and affordability of services and supports.
- There are gaps in the continuum of services and supports for Manitobans as we age, especially in rural, northern and Indigenous communities.

- Despite the commitment and best efforts of seniors serving organizations, services and supports are challenging to access and navigate and can operate in silos.
- While many seniors talk about how they are valued, ageism and ableism exist and should be reduced.

The Seniors Strategy is a highly, anticipated, sophisticated and living document that plans to address the difficulties that effect all seniors in Manitoba.

Thank you for your interest in the Seniors Strategy. I am looking forward to announcing the strategy in the near

After all, we are all aging, and every Manitoban deserves to age with dignity, with wellbeing, and with purpose.

~ Scott Johnston Minister for Seniors and Long-Term Care

For the next three years, Ed was a student and resident at St. John's College in the old Ashdown residence on Broadway and Hargrave. St. John's was Anglican, but Ed's background was not. He ended up there out of necessity and got attached to his contemporaries, most of whom were sons of Anglican ministers who were following in their father's footsteps. Years later Ed would have known the Dean of Calgary Cathedral, the Archbishop of Keewatin, the Bishop of Rupertsland, and others.

It was a most enjoyable afternoon over a cup of tea with a gentleman whose memory of events while growing up is remarkable. More of Ed's interesting life will appear in the March issue of the Senior Scope newspaper. ■

2022 has been a hit and miss kind of year for movies. I'm not necessarily referring to the box office or blockbuster films like the latest Jurassic Park sequel or Star Wars prequel. I'm talking about good old fashioned drama. Back in the sixties and seventies when filmmakers were writing and directing movies that were affecting the social fabric of the society we live in, films like Annie Hall, The Godfather, Easy Rider and One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest, altered the way we looked at the world. It was a special time in history when story and characters were the reason audiences kept flooding the cinema. There's no arguing there were movie stars like Humphrey Bogart, James Dean, Marilyn Monroe and many other iconic actors but usually each time out they played different characters. Their acting was ubiquitous and eclectic. It wasn't about computer generated images or comic book heroes. The aesthetic criteria for a good film was based on quality screen writing, characters that leaped off the page and dialogue that seemed natural and wasn't as they say, "on the nose". Many of the films were based on epic books but the directors were more stylistic. The end product was a film that felt unique and distinct. There were no prerequisite screenings. You didn't need to see sixteen other films or five Disney shows to understand the story. When the theatre lights dimmed it was magic time. The sixties and seventies had some of the most wonderfully talented directors of all time, Hitchcock, Spielberg, Lucas, Kubrick, Bergman, Woody Allen, Billy Wilder, Polanski, Altman, Kazan and other greats. Today, movies no longer seem like a director's medium or even an actor's medium. In the age of Covid movies have become franchise tent poles, cinematic universes where t.v shows and podcasts help connect the dots to the bigger story being told. Most audience members have no clue who directed the latest Marvel, DC or Star Wars content. They all look and sound the same and follow a similar cookie cutter plot.

Today, I've tried to narrow down the best Canadian films of 2022 that are original, director and actor driven and have something unique to say instead of spitting out_slightly different versions of the original product.

Women Talking

Director: Sara Polley

Rooney Mara, Jessie Buckley and Claire Foy star in Women Talking, a tale of a remote religious community in which men cruelly call the shots.

"Perhaps forgiveness can, in some instances, be confused with permission."

The profundity of that simple statement lies at the heart of the horrors found at the center of Sarah Polley's brilliant Women Talking. Based on the novel of the same name, the film's almost dismissive title obscures the darkness of the realities the women at the centre of its story must face.

After confirmation through capture that the men in their community have been drugging and raping them in their sleep over the course of many years, the women in a small Mennonite community use the rare occasion of the men's departure (to post bail for the perpetrators) to convene and discuss their options for survival. As the story unfolds, they lay out their choices: do nothing, stay and fight, or leave. A communal vote eliminates the first, then ties the second and third. And so, together, eight women congregate to lay out the pros and cons of each. What hangs in the balance is forgiveness.

They have been instructed to wipe the slate clean by the time of the men's return in two days. If they refuse, they relinquish their right to enter the kingdom of heaven, as dictated by the very men who have violated them.

Polley's script deftly conveys the enormous weight of the impossible choice these women have been tasked with making. The extent of the harm that has been done to them is terrifying to behold — knocked out with cow tranquilizers sprayed through the slats in their wooden homes and brutalized as they lay helpless and unconscious. And the rapes themselves are so vicious that they leave irrefutable lasting evidence: broken teeth, and bloody fetuses expelled in the dark of night. And yet, the men have spent years telling them their pain is the work of ghosts, or the devil, or worst of all, their own narcissistic pleas for attention. "They made us disbelieve ourselves," says one young woman over the course of the day. To her, it is almost worse than the assault itself to be made to doubt her own reality. After all, how can harm be remedied if it cannot even be acknowledged?

Doug and the Slugs and Me

Director: Teresa Alferd

Director Teresa Alfeld's very personal film, "Doug and the Slugs and Me," chronicles the rise, fall and legacv of the 1980s band led by singer Doug Bennett, who happened to be her East Van neighbour when she was a kid. For years, Bennett's raspy voice was heard over the party music of The Slugs, whose mix of New Wave, R&B, reggae and ska nearly broke the band into the U.S. market but remained a uniquely Canadian success story with hits including "Too Bad," "Day By Day," "Makin' It Work," "Chinatown Calculation" and more.

Teresa practically was raised at her best friend and next- door-neighbour Shea Bennett's home in East Vancouver during the 1990s. She was aware Shea's father Doug Bennett was the lead singer of Doug and the Slugs, but had no idea how well known they were. When Teresa and Shea's friendship came to an abrupt end in high school, the former BFF's completely lost touch with each other. In 2004 Teresa was beyond surprised to hear Doug had passed away at age 52.

Throughout the film Teresa gains impressive access to surviving bandmates and to Bennett's family. Inturn, the director becomes a central figure in her own film and has no problem when the lense magnifies her past. Her camera captures her reuniting with Shea as the bond they shared is reinginited and she reflects on how Doug affected her early years. As Teresa learns more about the band and the Bennett family, she realizes there was more going on next door than she could understand as a child, "What was (in my mind) going to be a quick and dirty rock-doc soon blossomed into a four-year journey," says Teresa in a director's note on the documentary's website. "What started as Directed by Winnipeger Sean Garrity and penned by former Winnipeg Jonas Chernick, who also happens to star in the feature.

The End of Sex

Josh (Jonas Chernick) and Emma (Emily Hampshire) are ready to jump all over each other when they finally have a week alone together while their daughters attend a sleepover camp, but they quickly find that things aren't like they used to be. Their attempts to revive things, which include a threesome with Emma's colleague Wendy (Melanie Scrofano), only serve to dredge up more potential issues that make them question whether they're truly compatible. The End of Sex reunites My Awkward Sexual Adventure director Sean Garrity with his stars Hampshire and Chernick, who take on writing duties for this film. This is a comedy that's meant to showcase perfectly normal people who have adjusted to the state of being parents, putting different things first and being ignorant of how their own relationship to each other has changed in the process. This is a story that could happen to any couple.

The Kids in the Hall: Comedy Punks Director: Reg Hakema

In Reg Harkema's latest documentary, he takes a deep dive into the history of Dave Foley, Bruce McCulloch, Kevin McDonald, Mark McKinney and Scott Thompson — otherwise known as the Kids in the Hall. Recounting the history of the famed sketch comedy troupe, investigating some behindthe-scenes drama and paying tribute to their legacy, The Kids in the Hall: Comedy Punks is a passionate and thoughtful film about five Canadian kids who left an indelible mark on comedy and pop culture. Comedy Punks interweaves the creation of their hit TV show and archival videos from their personal collections with talking heads, creating an entire new perspective on the journey The Kids endured to reach the top of their profession. Harkema interviews the group as a whole and one on one, providing each Kid the opportunity to share his own memories. It's clear from their group interview that their chemistry hasn't grown stale. They swap stories like army buddies, and any past resentments appear to have subsided a long time ago. For those unfamiliar with the Kids' story the documentary retells their journey: Thompson's fight with leukemia, McKinney and McCulloch departing for Saturday Night Live and Foley and McDonald's falling out. Harkema isn't afraid to ask the tough questions but at the same time the film doesn't turn into a gossip rag by treating the documentary almost as if he were protecting his own children.

Black Ice

Director: Hubert David

Black Ice celebrity producers included, LeBron James, Maverick Carter, and rappers Drake and Future. Billy Hunter, the former head of the NBA players association, who claims he holds the exclusive rights to produce a film about the Coloured Hockey League (CHL) has sued the producers for approximately ten million dollars. Current and former NHL players are interviewed throughout the documentary like P.K. Subban, Make Dumba, Wavne Simmonds, and Akim Ali. Many of them talk about the racism and abuse they've faced while playing the game they love. The film also chronicles the story of Herb Carnegie, an amazingly talented Black player who probably could've led the NHL in scoring during the 1940s and '50s but never conquered the big leagues because of his skin color. Only long after his death was he inducted into the Hockey Hall of Fame. The NHL finally broke its color barrier in 1958, a decade after Jackie Robinson was hitting homers in the majors. That year Willie O'Ree became the first Black hockey player to play in the National Hockey League (NHL). He played professional hockey for more than 20 years, including 45 games with the Boston Bruins.

752 Is Not a Number

Director: Babak Payami

On January 8, 2020, Ukraine Airlines Flight 752 crashed as it was leaving air space over Tehran, Iran. All 176 souls on board perished, many of them Iranian Canadians . The incident occured five days after a US dronestrike assassinated Iranian Major General Qasem Soleimani, and only hours after the Iranian military had launched retaliatory ballistic missile strikes on an American airbase in Iraq.

Immediately after the plane went down, video footage was leaked showing Flight 752 being shot down by what looked to be an object fired from the ground. For days, Iranian authorities denied responsibility. They claimed the plane crashed because of an engine fire. The government agencies quickly bulldozed the crash site, destroying crucial evidence, and additionally refused to grant international safety and oversight bodies access to any of the aircraft's wreckage or its black box voice recorders.

Inevitably foreign governments reported the truth. In fact, Flight 752 had been shot down by the Iranian military. Eventually, Iran's government story shifted, from malfunction to pilot error, before they ultimately came clean admitting the plane was destroyed by a military missile which was only launched because of a falsely identified threat.

Newmarket, Ontario, Hamed Esmaeilion does not want an apology, nor compensation. He only wanted to discover the truth about the tragedy which took the lives of his wife Parisa and their nine-year-old daughter Reera. Determined not to buy into Iran's propaganda, Hamed travels to Iran to claim his family's remains. Afterward he embarks on a journey littered with bureaucratic red tape in an unprecedented effort to bring justice to all the victims of this atrocity.

752 Is Not a Number is directed by veteran Iranian-Canadian filmmaker Babak Payami, whose 2001 movie Secret Ballot won Best Director at the Venice Film Festival. The film most connects emotionally in small flashes of detail, and moments of reflection. It's heartbreaking when Hamed notes that his wife and daughter weren't on the list of the first 50 victims initially released after the crash, and speculates that this must have been because their bodies were more difficult to identify. Later, Payami and cinematographer Amir Ghorbani Nia let the camera linger on Hamed sorting through dead flowers and rain-stained offerings of condolence outside the door of his office. Finally, as the film moves toward its conclusion and progress seemingly arrives in the form of a Ukrainian legal action as Hamed copes with the effect of Russia's invasion of Ukraine. ■

$250,000 from the Jets for the next five seasons.

- For the next five seasons he would receive $100,000 per year as a club
- He received $1 million in cash from the World Hockey Properties Ltd., a branch of WHA owners who will find new, major endorsements for Hull whose share of all contracts will be 25 per cent.

It was a remarkable deal for the Jets and the WHA. The most well-known and probably, the best player at the time, had given the brand-new league some much needed authenticity.

At the time, very few NHL players could hope to match Hull's physical gifts. He had speed, a monster slapshot and a powerful physique and he rode that combination to the top of the game in the 1960s.

Born and raised on a farm in Pointe Anne, Ont., Hull's amazing talent catapulted him through the minor hockey system and by age 16, he had signed what the NHL called, a "C-card" that made him property of the Chicago Blackhawks.

He made his NHL debut in 1957-58 and finished his rookie season with 47 points and was runner-up to Frank Mahovlich as rookie of the year. Then, with the help of teammate Stan Mikita. he developed the curved hockey stick, led the Hawks to the 1961 Stanley Cup and in 1964-65, despite missing nine games due to injury, the Golden Jet scored 39 goals and helped Chicago reach the Stanley Cup finals, where they lost out to Montreal. At season's end he was awarded the Hart and Lady Byng trophies. The following season he set an NHL record with 54 goals and repeated as the Hart Trophy winner.

He was the best player in the game. In 1971-72, Hull hit the 50-goal mark for the fifth time and experts believed he was the playing the best hockey of his career, but amazingly, that would be the last time the NHL would see him for eight years.

The next summer, Hull signed with the Jets and played so brilliantly, he almost single-handedly made the WHA a legitimate contender to the NHL's throne as the best hockey league in the world. When Ulf Nilsson and Anders Hedberg came over from Europe, the Jets' "Hot Line" became the most exciting thing in the game. In 1974-75, Hull not only faced the Soviets in the second Canada-USSR series, he also went on to score 77 goals in the regular season to establish a new record for a major professional league.

How good was Hull? Well, in 1973 and 1975 he was chosen the WHA's MVP and in 1976 and 1978, he was an integral part of the Jets' three Avco Cup victories.

Following the NHL/WHA merger in 1979, Hull remained with the Jets for 18 games in the 1979-80 season before a trade sent him to the Hartford Whalers to play alongside Gordie Howe. He retired after that season with 610 goals in 1,063 regular-season games.

Bobby and the Stanley Cup.

Bobby Hull Winnipeg Jets.

Bobby with the Hawks.

Hull finally took his place in the Hockey Hall of Fame in 1983 along with old teammate Stan Mikita. It was a well-deserved honour if only for one reason: Without Bobby Hull the National Hockey League's Winnipeg Jets would not exist today. ■

An Easy Way to Make Your Life Better

We are well into the New Year we usually find ourselves taking stock of life and, perhaps, making a few resolutions. Most likely, the promises we made to ourselves are ignored and we tell ourselves we will do better 'next year'.

Too often, when making our resolutions, we fail to take into consideration the actual realities of our lifestyle and commitments. We tend towards 'goals' rather than 'needs'.

With a fresher outlook here are three ways to try a different re-approach in

Do something you've never done

It could be as simple as learning a party trick that will impress all generations at a family gathering. The focus should be on something that gives you pleasure and a degree of personal satisfaction. It does not have to be as radical as Jenny Murphy who began an undergraduate degree at Carleton University at 72 years of age, but her choice does illustrate that anything is possible. She was one of the seniors featured in Heart to Home Meals Show a Little Heart video competition that examined interactions between different generations and challenged some of the stereotypes associated with getting old.

Look for a new hobby.

Often hobbies are regarded as a solitary task but there are lots of activities that are much more fun when they become shared activities. For example, in Ennismore, Ontario every Monday afternoon, seniors meet to take part in the town's knitting and crochet club. It was grown from a few friends into a year-round event that has two significant outcomes. Firstly, it is an important social gathering for the local seniors. Organizer Marylyn affectionately describes the group as a family. Secondly, the clothes, toys and blankets made by the seniors are distributed to people who are less fortunate during the Holiday Season.

Eat better.

According to author Michael Pollan: High-quality food is better for your health. This simple message is universally understood but it's not always easy to follow, particularly for seniors.

All of us benefit when our daily routine includes a good diet. For breakfast, that should involve protein and fibre. According to the Heart to Home Meals consultant dietitian, Andrea Olynyk, a boiled egg, a piece of wholegrain toast and a half cup of raspberries is a combination that will satisfy your hunger and keep your digestion moving.

Between meals it is easy to snack on junk, if it is readily available, therefore adopt the mantra: see no evil, eat no evil.

Instead, stock up with healthy snacks that can satisfy your cravings and make you feel better about doing it.

And as with eating, it is a similar story with drinking. Water covers 71% percent of the earth's surface, and the human body is 55-75% water. It is something we need every day. Try to drink between 1.5-2 litres a day. It may be tasteless, but it matters.

Improving your diet is not an easy or quick fix and Andrea concedes there will be setbacks, but she stresses the goal is a healthy lifestyle where you feel good about yourself. So, while there's no magic solution, success is possible through a lot of minor alterations over a long period.

A lot of people will be re-starting 2023 thinking about losing weight and it is easy to latch on to the latest diet fad. Maybe the one being suggested by a celebrity, or a friend or someone at the grocery store who mentioned it in passing as you were waiting at the checkout. But remember: Fads don't work and there is no quick fix.

Instead, look at simple ways to improve your health by making some small alterations to your lifestyle. This could include decreasing consumption of certain foods and perhaps increasing your exercise routine. Both can make a difference and assist you towards a memorable 2023 with family and friends. ■

Sri Lankan Independence Day

By Senaka Samarasinghe

Sri Lankan Seniors Manitoba (SLSM) commemorated Sri Lankan Diamond Jubilee (75th Anniversary) Independence Day on Feb. 4th 2023. To celebrate this great occasion SLSM arranged a get together on Feb. 3rd 2023. At the beginning of the celebration the first agenda item was to sing Sri Lankan national anthem by all participants holding the national flag.

The second agenda item was to felicitate two Seniors. Firstly, President Indra Ariyaratne congratulated Mohammed Ismath as he was elected as the Vice President of the Pembina Active Living (PAL) at the AGM held on June 14th 2022. PAL is a charitable organization in South Winnipeg and committed to enhance the life of all older adults. Secondly, Indra acknowledged Senaka Samarasinghe as he was selected as a recipient of a Member of Parliament Terry Duguid Platinum Jubilee Community Leadership Award.

The last agenda item was that Indra introduced youth invitee Buddhika Aberatne. He is working as a facilitator to establish Sri Lankan youth and student organizations.

Among the invitees Kasun Wijayarante, Treasurer, Sri Lankan Association of Manitoba joined with us. Kasun's continuous support to SLSM is commonable. ■

Red Hatters Celebrate 25 Years! CALLING ALL MANITOBA RED HAT ALUMNI!

By Rossita Schau

In 2023, the Red Hat Society will celebrate 25 years of "red hatting"! Who would have believed that in 1998, giving a red hat to a friend would have such an impact.

And in Manitoba, hatting has also had an impact, with women donning purple outfits wearing a red hat and having fun at the ballpark, restaurants, and even pole dancing to name a few group activities. Over the past 25 years, many chapters were started, with at one time, over 165 chapters in Manitoba amounting to well over 4,000 ladies.

Many of the alumni will remember fond memories of the annual Red Hat HOOT in Stonewall where we gathered sharing a meal and laughing at those skits. We looked forward every year to gathering in the afternoon for comradery. And over those 25 years, two Red Hat Conventions, one Manitoba Red Hat Homecoming, and one Birthday Bash were very successful events full of laughs. Fond memories in 2006 when 500 ladies in their finest purple attire and red hat paraded down to the Casino Bowl at Club Regent for dinner and a variety show. Followed in 2008 with "The Girls Are Back In Town" Convention to celebrate our 10th Anniversary! We got together at The International Inn for an Elvis impersonator, clowns, balloons, and of course birthday cake and gifts. Many of us have these wonderful memories of the Red Hat Society outings with food, fun, frivolity and friends.

The afternoon and evening will be filled with demonstrations, memorial slides shows, vendors alley, photo opportunities with the red hat fedora and boa, much like the one on display at the Smithsonian in The States. Cocktails followed by a 3 course sit down dinner followed with entertainment and a rock and roll band to dance the night away.

It will be a wonderful opportunity to reconnect with Red Hat ladies from the past and make new friends. Come and join us, bring a friend or two. For more information, please contact Judy at 204-253-1579 or email: judy.schau01@gmail.com

Dust off the red hat, put on your gala outfit, wear some bling, and join us on Saturday April 29, 2023 in

HEART HEALTH February 2023

February is Heart Health Month!

Strive to be heart smart!

One of the best practices to take care of your heart is to be active daily!

Don't lot winter be a barrier to being active. Get out and about, there are many tips for staying active year around!

Participating in an activity with others is a great way to stay connected and be more successful at staying active. Social connections have been proven to improve your heart health, longevity, and physical and mental well-being. Taking time for self-care can help you relax, reduce stress and help keep your blood pressure within a healthy range.

Improving your physical health includes preventative measures such as falls prevention. Active Aging in Manitoba wants to help you be healthy, more active, and independent!

As aptly stated by Ronald M. Davis, MD, AMA President, In Mantroba 1956-2008: "If we had a pill (or surgery) that contained all of the benefits of exercise, it would be the most widely prescribed drug (procedure) in the world."

We hope you take to "heart" the following information!

HEART HEALTH Explore

The Importance of Staying Active During the Winter

Lucky for us, we live in a sunny province. Keeping active outside during the winter can be challenging; however, the sunshine can unconsciously nudge us out, overcoming the doldrums of feeling cooped up inside. The hardest part is often getting on our outerwear. Once dressed and outside, most of us feel good about our decision to enjoy the winter. day. Being outdoors is a great mood booster, with the natural sunlight increasing your Vitamin D levels and aiding in your sleep. Now and again, there will be days when getting outside won't be so easy. Don't fret, there are many things that you can do indoors to keep active and healthy too. The key is motivating yourself to make.

We can all think of barriers that halt us from engaging in activity and movement. Planning for barriers in advance can help you overcome them when they face you head-on.

Here's a simple exercise that can help you. Grab a piece of paper, and write down all the roadblocks you foresee stopping you from being active. Some barriers are legitimate (for example, no transportation to the neighbourhood pool), others not as much (it's too cold out, I'm tired, I have no energy etc.), and come up with a solution for each barrier that you jot down.

Writing down
your obstacles and potential solutions

Writing down your obstacles and potential solutions prepares you for dealing with them. For example, it's too cold outside; you could tell yourself, if I dress warmly and shorten my walk outside, I can manage. Once you get outside, you may not shorten your walk as you'll find you're enjoying yourself and staying warm.

There are numerous winter activities; here are some ideas to get you moving and feeling great. The key is always to do something you enjoy; it will help you stick to your regime.

Walking

Find a friend or go solo. Take a nature walk. Head to a park or trail that you've never been to before – explore.

If you're in Winnipeg, check out this link highlighting some great winter walks. www. todocanada.ca/15-places-to-go-winterwalking-in-winnipeg

In Manitoba – check out our many provincial parks. www.todocanada.ca/provincial-parks- visil-winter-manitoba/

Snowshoeing

If you don't own snowshoes, you can rent a pair and try them out. Check out www. winterpeg.org for ski and snowshoe rentals.

Cross country skiling

Pop-up X-country ski libraries in Winnipeg have surfaced, making it easy to try if you haven't done so. If you reside outside the city, see if you can find a ski partner and try it out

Bird Watching

Grab a field guide bird book from the library and head outside to the neighbouring trail or forest

Curling

Being outdoors is a great mood booster, with the natural sunlight increasing your Vitamin D levels and aiding in your sleep.

General tips:

If you are inactive now and have health conditions, you may want to talk to your healthcare provider first.

 Start slow: Start with short times and increase the time gradually. As exercises become more manageable, you can increase the difficulty.

2) Wear Appropriate Footwear:

Supportive shoes/boots with a low wide heel and non-slip soles are important. Be cautious and avoid patches of ice at this time of year. Wear grippers to aid outdoor walking.

 Walking outdoors: Wear bright clothes or add reflective material to your clothing to help other road users see you better. Dress in layers

4) Listen to Your Body: Do outdoor activities that feel safe and comfortable for you. Pace yourself and rest when needed. Follow prior recommendations of your healthcare provider. Stop if you feel unsteady or have any pain, or difficulty breathing.

Call 911 if symptoms persist. Discuss symptoms you may experience with your healthcare provider.

The bottom line for success is fun and enjoyment. Make it social; participate with a friend or group; this can help with accountability and help you stick to your plan.

Celebrate what you can do every day. Enjoy and appreciate every minute that you can be active!

HEART HEALTH Self-Care

Investing in You: Make Self-Care a Priority

What is Self Care?

Self-care is essential for your overall health. While we focus on the world around us, sometimes we forget about our health and happiness.

Engaging in self-care is not a luxury. It can take just a few moments of regular self-care to improve your energy, mood, focus and well-being. It's discovering what works for you to recharge and manage your stress.

Mindful meditation, exercise regularly, practicing kindness, participating in a creative pursuit (dancing, cooking, gardening etc.), watching or reading something funny, calling a friend, the list is endless.

Here are some other great ways you can take care of yourself:

Take a walk

Get out in nature, somewhere quiet and peaceful, and take a long walk.

Being in nature soothes your soul and helps you process your thoughts and feelings.

Enjoy a quiet cup of tea

Make yourself your favorite cup of tea and curl up in a comfy chair to enjoy it without any other distractions.

Take a yoga class

Yoga is a form of meditation in action. It also increases your muscle tone, flexibility, and strength while calming your mind and giving you more clarity and focus.

Regardless of what you do, remember to enjoy yourself and the process. Life's simple pleasures are some of the greatest moments you can give yourself.

HEART HEALTH Connect

Staying Connected - Key to Active Aging

Staying healthy isn't only about physical health. It's also about your social and emotional wellbeing too.

In fact, being socially active and engaged in a community can give you a sense of purpose and help you to live a fuller, more meaningful life.

Unfortunately, it can be challenging to connect. with others for many reasons, such as friends and family moving away, the loss of a partner/spouse or mobility challenges which can make it hard to get out and about. This can lead to isolation and loneliness, which can be detrimental to your physical, mental and emotional health.

People without strong social networks may become isolated. Social isolation can lead to both reduced mental and physical health.

By staying connected with others as you age, you will experience a variety of benefits, including:

A boost to your mental health

Consistent contact with friends can help maintain good emotional health, which > means reducing stress and lowering the risk of depression. It can also reduce the risk of dementia. Sociali activities can even improve cognitive function of the brain.

Better cooking and eating habits Cooking meals with others is a great way. to connect, bringing more enjoyment to food and cating, also leading to better overall nutrition. It is easy to let nutrition slide, especially as you age, but it can be easier to eat more and choose healthier options

Provides a sense of belonging

Social activities not only help you stay connected to those you care about most, but they can give you a feeling of belonging. Finding engaging ways to spend time with others allows you to build a support system.

> Being socially active and engaged in a community can give you a sense of purpose and help you to live a fuller, more meaningful life.

However, connecting with people can be overwhelming when you don't know where to

Here are some tips to keep you. active, engaged, and connected in your community:

Get out and about in your community stay connected in your community. is to look at what activities are. available for you to participate in. Community activities can be a great way to meet new people, learn. a new skill and keep your mind active. Join a group that focuses on activities. that interest you, such as yoga, dancing, reading, crafting, cooking etc. Contact your local. library, community or cultural center to see if there's anything that interests you!

Volunteer

As you age and after retirement, it may be difficult to feel purposeful and connected to the community. However. Volunteering can lead to a sense of accomplishment and belonging.

Above all, volunteering is about making. connections with people. When you volunteer your time, you can feel more socially connected. and less lonely.

Being a volunteer also allows you to meet likeminded people. For example, if you volunteer at an animal shelter, you get to spend time with other people who love animals too. When you volunteer your time at a performing arts center, you get to meet fellow volunteers who share your passion for the arts.

> Community groups and organizations are always looking for volunteers. Find something that suits your interests by contacting any local organizations, centres, libraries, museums etc. that you would be interested int-

Regardless of how you choose to connect, ultimately the more you do, the more new people you'll meet! Staying connected. and engaged is also a great way to boost confidence feel good about yourself.

Joining a dub, taking a dass, and volunteering your time are all great ways to stay socially connected. You just have to find the right fit for you. The opportunties are endless!

HEART HEALTH February 2023

Inspiring Active Aging & Healthy Lifestyles

It's February, and many of your good intentions. to get moving in January have not happened. However, it is never too late to get moving; here are some great reasons!

Benefits of being active:

Since we were children, we worked towards gaining independence. As adults, we realize that independence comes with the responsibility for our health and wellness, So, as we age, we fiercely hold onto that independence! Our level of physical activity contributes to our ability to remain independent, age in place and look after ourselves.

Have you thought about it in the context of your. day-to-day activities? For example, is it more difficult to get off the couch, carry the grocery bags, or stand to make a meal? We all want to live independently and stay mentally sharp and healthy. So, what are the key factors in our control that can contribute to remaining independent?

Activity helps us to stay independent

Our level of physical activity is a significant factor. in remaining independent. Going for a walk. dancing, attending a fitness class, working in the yard, swimming, doing yoga, bike riding..... the list is endless!

The 24-hour movement Guidelines: recommend. 150 minutes of moderate to vigorous activity per week or about 30 minutes for 5 out of 7 days per week. Research has found that this is the amount of activity needed to start to see some. health benefits.

Those benefits include improved cardiovascular. fitness, muscle strength & endurance and balance, Moderate activity is best defined as any activity that slightly raises your heart and breathing rates. In addition, you should be able to carry on a conversation comfortably.

Prevent chronic disease

Physical activity can improve the cardiovascular system by strengthening the heart muscle. The 24 hr. movement quidelines suggest moderate to vigorous aerobic physical activity can help to reduce high blood pressure, improve one's cholesterol profile, manage weight, reduce the risk of heart disease and stroke, and improve circulation. The risk of developing type 2 diabetes and your mortality risk can also be reduced. by improving cardiovascular fitness. Physical activity can also help protect against the onset. of dementia and can slow its progression. Being active can help manage chronic diseases so often associated with aging. Active people are less likely to develop chronic health conditions. If physical activity is new for you, discuss what you want to do with your healthcare provider.

Reduce sedentary time

Sitting for long periods at a time is detrimental. to our overall health - like smoking a pack of digarettes every day! The 24-hour Guidelines also tell us that standing is considered light physical activity. If you must sit for an extended period remind yourself to get up every 30 minutes and move for a few minutes. A sedentary lifestyle increases the risk of developing heart disease. diabetes, stroke, and depression. The 24-Hr Movement Guidelines recommend limiting sedentary time to 8 hours or less and limiting. recreational screen time to 3 hours in 24 hours. Reducing your sedentary time will contribute to improving your overall health. Think of sitting less, not just exercising more.

Improved mobility

Living independently can be jeopardized by reduced mobility. because of reduced muscle strength as we age. Strength training helps our muscle strength and mobility and supports bone health.

As we age, our stability and mobility can change, increasing the risk of falling. A fall can lead to a loss of independence, a change in lifestyle, and possibly social isolation. Exercise is crucial for fall prevention. The World Health Organization guidelines for physical activity suggest that older adults focus on functional exercises emphasizing. balance and strength training at least three times per week. Functional exercises are movements that mimic movements that we do every day. For example, an exercise called "sit to stand" is what we do every time we get up off a chair and sit. back down. Doing this exercise can help improve lower body strength and balance.

Improved sleep quality

Most Canadians do not get enough sleep! The 24-hour Movement Guidelines regularly recommend 7-8 hours of sleep with consistent bed and wake-up times. In addition, being active can improve sleep, improving our ability to be active.

Staying connected to your community: Physical Activity is a perfect way to stay. connected to your friends, family, and the local. community. Being active improves your physical health and benefits your mental health through the human connections maintained and made. In addition, maintaining social connections has been shown to prevent cognitive decline. Make plans with friends or family to do something active and connect regularly.

Being physically active is vital to remaining independent and living the life you want to do as you remain in your community. So let's get movingl

Functional Exercises to do at Home

Stand behind a chair, feet flat on the floor, and slightly wider than your shoulder width. Slowly lower towards the ground as if you were going to sit in a chair, keeping your chest and head up. Staying balanced on both feet allow our weight to shift back to your heels. Slowly stand up. Be careful that our knees do not go over your toes.

Find a line on the floor and try to walk along. that path as closely as possible. Keep arms out to the side and take larger steps to make balancing easier. Look straight ahead and use good posture. You can also walk within arm's length of the wall so you can: always reach out and touch it if needed.

Shift Weight Foot - to - Foot Standing behind a chair slowly shift your. weight onto one foot going as far as you are comfortable and return to the starting position. Shift weight to the other foot. This can also be done seated by shifting your. weight to one side and leaning as far as possible to that side. Shift to other side.

IN TUNE WITH JU OUR COMMUNITY

~ February 2023 ~

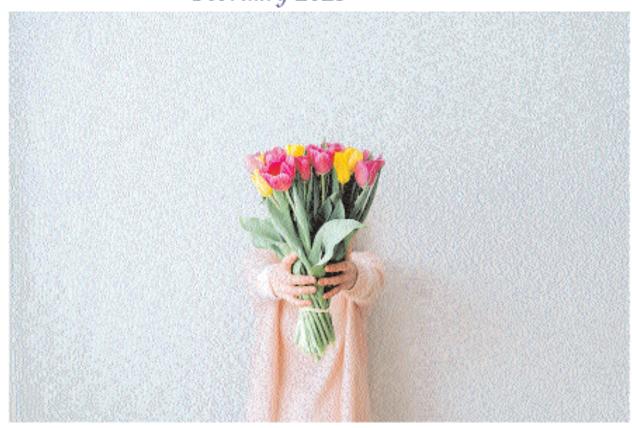

Will you be mine, Valentine?

Through the years, the meaning of Valentine's Day, and my feelings associated with this love-filled holiday, have changed.

When I was growing up, I couldn't wait to get to the store to have my pick of the cartoonish cards with the cutesy sayings that all reiterated the same "I love you" message. Whether it was coming out of the mouth of a cat ("You're purr-fect") or a train ("I choo-choo choose you"), the colourful people, objects and animals seemed to leap off the store shelves as children like me chose their favourites (and parents opened up their purses and wallets with a collective sigh).

Of course, there were the pop culture cards like the Peanuts gang, Mickey/Minnie Mouse and Batman, even in our day, but the real crass commercialism came later. When Star Wars hit the movie theatres in the late 1970s, it started a whole wave of franchisebased Valentine's Day cards and suddenly kids had to have the latest action figures or there was just no living with them. The message was still the same - just camouflaged in a Luke Skywalker body, or later, in beautiful but cold-blooded Anna from Frozen.

By now, you might be thinking, we're talking about Valentine's Day - what about romance? I'm getting to that. Most adults still approach Valentine's Day as an opportunity to tell their partners how much they mean to them. But commercialism stubbornly clouds the picture of true love. Flowers and chocolate are the top two ways to say "I love you" so, of course, February 14 is the most lucrative day for flower shops and chocolate vendors. I'd venture to say chocolate hearts are a particular big seller.

I've probably worked in retail far too long, or this article would be less focused on commercialism and more on true love. As for Valentine's Day origins, it is named after a priest called St. Valentine who was preaching the good word in third-century Rome. He was martyred on February 14, 269, thus giving us the date for this eponymous day.

My feelings for Valentine's Day changed dramatically, however, when my husband proposed to me. We had gone to Gimli in February for a romantic weekend, and he was planning to pop the question when we arrived on Friday. It then dawned on him that it was Friday the 13th. Now Kevin isn't overly superstitious but who wants to get engaged on Friday, the 13th? I mean, really. So he opted for the next day, Saturday, February the 14th, which also happened to be Valentine's Day.

So now February 14 is the anniversary of my engagement and how can that not be romantic? All commercialism aside, Valentine's Day has come to have a very special place in my heart. And after 35 years of marriage, on February 14, Kevin still buys me flowers.

Caring for a Parent: Christine's Story Alzheimer Society of Manitoba

Christine Williams was in disbelief when her mom was diagnosed with dementia in the summer of 2013. It was less than a year after her dad passed away.

"I felt like within a year, I went from having two active, healthy parents to my dad being gone and almost immediately needing to be a caregiver for my mom," Christine says.

Christine began noticing changes in her mom's behaviour - things that seemed to be more than grief, like her mom frequently phoning her for unusual or strange reasons. After visiting a doctor in Flin Flon, her mom was sent to Winnipeg to see a neurologist and was diagnosed with dementia.

Her mom's doctor referred them to the Alzheimer Society, but Christine couldn't bring herself to make the call. "I was in complete denial at the time," Christine says. "But then - they called me. I could not be more grateful that someone from the Alzheimer Society reached out to me because I wasn't going to do it.'

The Society helped Christine understand the importance of planning for the future, including the significance of legal documents like a power of attorney. "A will, a health care directive and a power of attorney are key documents we recommend clients put in place to ensure they have the ability to act on someone else's behalf when the person they are supporting can no longer do it for themselves," says Erin Crawford, Program Director at the Alzheimer Society.

Christine says the early planning suggested by the Society came in handier than she could have ever expected. "I can't tell you the number of times I got out those legal papers," says Christine. "My biggest takeaway is to get your parents' affairs in order - those papers are everything. They're your voice."

After a car accident in 2014, Christine's mom was temporarily unable to walk, and her dementia symptoms began progressing quickly. She moved into long-term care in 2015 but adjusting to this change was not easy. Watching her mom struggle to get used to the new environment took an enormous emotional toll on Christine, who was also raising two young children at the time.

"It felt like I was never doing enough. I was parenting and working full-time, so I had a lot going on. But now I know that my visits - they were enough. My mom would have wanted me to be okay with that."

It took Christine's mom about a year and a half to settle into the care home, and Christine says she even began doing more activities - she loved music, singing and dancing most of all. Her mom passed away in February 2021.

Looking back, Christine wishes she could have accepted her mom's diagnosis and dementia symptoms sooner than she had. But, through local seminars in Flin Flon, help from friends and information from the Society, Christine found the support she needed to move forward.

"I felt alone in the beginning, but with the support of friends, family and the Alzheimer Society, I learned I wasn't alone," she says. "As hard as it was then, I look back and realize it was all okay to accept things and appreciate the help around me.

Collaborative Impact with Social Prescrib

What is Social Prescribing?

Social prescribing is a means for health care providers to connect clients/patients to a range of non-clinical services in the community in order to improve their social connections, health, and well being.

Healthcare provider

The healthcare provider sees a need and refers the client/patient to a Connector.

Connector

The Connector identifies the person's specific needs and interests, and connects the person with appropriate community resources.

Community resources

Community resources include a wide range of activities and services, such as social groups, art activities, exercise classes, and lifelong learning activities.

Why is Social Prescribing Needed?

Being social connected: brings enjoyment and a sense of purpose in life; adds to quality of life; reduces the risk of mental health problems like depression; and reduces the risk of physical health problems.1

The lack of social connection (social isolation) has a negative effect on mental and physical health.2 The impact of social isolation on mortality is comparable to that of smoking or a lack of physical activity.3

Before COVID-19

20% of Manitobans aged 65 or older were socially isolated said they were lonely sometimes or would have liked to participate in more social activities

During COVID-19

36% of Manitobans aged 65 or older said they were lonely sometimes or more

Social isolation is defined as having a small or no social network, limited communication or contact with social network, and little or no social participation. Loneliness refers to how people FEEL about their social connections. It is possible to feel lonely even when there are people around. People can also be satisfied and not lonely with a small network.5

Trust your Ears

Kristy Tarasoff - Ear Architect. (see advertisement on page 18)

The New Year always entices us to turn the page, and live healthier, eat better and treat ourselves with care and kindness. This is a mantra that should be in place all year long, as we only have one body, complete with the ability to listen and be heard.

Our Ears are what connect us to our network of support. We do this on the phone, in person, one on one and in groups.

Our Ears keep our brain active, through listening and learning - sounds that happen around us all day everyday, and speech or communication.

As we age, most of us will experience a decline in hearing. No, this isn't because it's hereditary, but as a simple result of changes in our body. When your knees start to feel like they can no longer move you, or your eyes start to blur, and your hands tire from daily tasks, we can't deny the aging process but we can be preventative about our health.

Most of us want to be connected to others. It's part of being human because isolation and loneliness leads to depression. Stay connected, invest in yourself and be proactive about a hearing check. Trust your head and your heart, that the greatest gift we have is the ability to hear, listen to conversation, music, our parents, siblings and grandchildren.

The greatest joy I experience, in my practice is the soulful smile of giving back the gift of hearing. I listen to others tell their stories of challenges and happiness. It's rewarding to be inspired by the subtle changes that are experienced through simple sounds, like our shoes on the snow, the rustle of our coat. Or the signal light in your vehicle.

Do you hear those sounds?

Over time, if we do not hear sound, or speech our brain will start to forget that we ever heard it at all. There are treatments for almost all medical conditions, which is why we consult with professionals to talk and discuss what the process looks like. Trust and talk to your hearing healthcare professional, as often as possible to keep your brain engaged in the here and now.

Be happy, be trusting and invest in your health, for the future. My experience with patients over the last decade has been positive, and I'm happy to be here to help, and listen. ■

66 Be happy, be trusting and invest in your health, for the future.

Social Prescribing in Manitoba

Led by the Manitoba Association of Senior Communities, Social Prescribing Manitoba will strengthen alliances amongst key intersectoral players (Senior Resource Coordinators, Senior Centres, Age Friendly Communities, Primary Health Services which would include My Health Teams, and Home Care resources) reducing siloed, independent activities and building greater collaborative impact to facilitate healthy aging. This enhanced working relationship will ultimately impact all communities and older people served by the key players.
